Research topic

The PhD candidate will work with Prof Ihsan Yilmaz, Dr Priya Chacko and Dr Ana-Maria Bliuc to conduct research on civilizational populism and transnational political mobilization through digital technologies, with a focus on the Hindu nationalist movement and the Indian diaspora in Australia.

The candidate is strongly encouraged to consider the relationship between offline and online environments.

Project aim

The student will work towards completing a PhD thesis to investigate the main features of Hindu nationalist political mobilization through digital technologies among the Indian diaspora in Australia.

Some of the aims of the thesis project are listed below but the student is not limited to these suggestions:

Map gender differences in the Hindutva civilizational populist narratives that are conveyed to the India diaspora through digital and streaming media.

Analyse how gendered Hindutva civilizational populist narratives intersect with case, class, age and race.

Assess the impact of gendered Hindutva civilizational populist narratives on the Indian diasporic communities in Australia in terms of inter-group conflict and social cohesion.
